McMillan Antúnez Martínez-Lejarza P.A.

and proprietary information.

Next, you receive information that your former salesperson is now working for your competitor who is in Georgia and shared your company's confidential and propriety information. Next, you sue the salesperson and the competitor in Florida state court seeking damages and an injunction that forbids them from using your confidential records. However, you will need documents and discovery in Georgia to show the court that the competitor unlawfully interfered with your contract with the salesperson and offered the salesperson financial rewards to misappropriate your confidential and propriety records. A Florida subpoena is not enough – the records are in Georgia.
