Featured Collaboration: Miami Living Magazine x TCLG

As Regina's collaboration with Miami Living Magazine continues, we'd like to highlight this month's segment, in which she discusses several important topics related to High-Net-Worth Divorce. Family law becomes significantly more complex when high-net-worth individuals are involved-bringing with it intricate assets, privacy concerns, and high emotional stakes. To better understand how these cases are handled, we spoke with Regina Campbell (Home - TCLG - The Campbell Law Group), managing partner of The Campbell Law Group.

Known for her strategic approach to asset protection, dispute resolution, and navigating Florida's legal nuances, Regina offers professional insight into guiding clients through high-stakes family matters with clarity, discretion, and confidence.

Florida's CHOICE Act and What It Means for Non-Compete Agreements

Florida has long been considered a state that supports employers in protecting their business interests through non-compete agreements. These agreements are contracts that prevent former employees or contractors from working for a competitor, starting a similar business, or using confidential information gained during their employment to the detriment of their former employer. When drafted correctly, non-compete agreements help businesses safeguard trade secrets, customer relationships, proprietary processes, and other valuable assets that give them a competitive edge.

Blog Spotlight:

The Intricacies of High Net Worth Divorce Cases

Divorce proceedings are inherently complex and delicate matters, and cases involving high net-worth couples can become exponentially more complicated. Even when amicable, high net-worth divorce cases often carry elevated stakes due to the complexity of diving extensive assets, properties, and possibly other existing business entities. As a result, such cases prescribe specialized knowledge in both family and business law to address the intricate legal issues involved.
